MONDAY EVENING, AUGUST 81.

Can't Stand Prosperity.

Constantine Ashargan, once a militionaire, nov a ten-dollar-a-week clerk, called upon Interpreter Arberly, ex-consul to Jerusalem, at the barge of fice in New York yesterday. Constantine inherited a million dellars upon the death of his father, a wea thy manufacturer of Athens, whose only son he was, and he proceeded at once to take all the enjoyment he could out of it. He built a large amphitheatre in the suburbs of Athens, and besides introducing all the sensual revelvies of Eastern continental cities, he tried to revive the games known to his ancestors. His money went in streams, and one morning, after a week's debanch, when he was about twenty-five years of age, he came to his senses, a penniless bankrupt. Shortly afterwards his mother died and left him another million dollars. It took him seven years to squander the first; it took him eight years to squander the first; it took him eight years to squander the first; it took him eight years to squander the first; it took him seven years to squander the second. He purchased a costly steam yeacht, furnished it gorgeons; y, employed a retinue of servants and proceeded to Constantinople, where he emulated his career in Athens. He fought a duel with a young Russian nobleman and then, tiring of Constantinople, went to Bome. His money ran out, and he came to this country, anded at San Francisco and "beat" his way to New to k, where, after roughing it for a while, he secured a position as clerk.

He called on Interpreter Arberly yesterday with regard to a third fortune which an unce of his in Egypt had left him. Mr. Asharly will assist him to return to his native land, and, if the fortune shall mate islize, Constantine says he intends to settle down to a serious life, for he has learned a lesson by his experience in this country which he will not forget.
